Summary Report

The Commission for Social Development held its annual session to consider the following agenda items:

I. Ensuring Equal Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities in Society and Development
II. Promoting Social and Economic Inclusion of Refugees
III. Social Dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa’s Development

The session was attended by representatives of 27 Member States. On Sunday, the committee adopted the agenda of II, III, I, beginning discussion on the topic of “Promoting Social and Economic Inclusion for Refugees.”

By Monday evening, the Dais had received a total of four proposals covering a wide range of sub-topics, including refugee healthcare, education, employment, and assimilation. These included a working paper discussing the special needs of refugees displaced due to climate change, as well as a paper discussing the legal status of refugees. All of the delegates cooperated well with one another and engaged in meaningful discussion about their working papers.

On Tuesday, the delegates eagerly responded to the comments made on the working papers and worked diligently to address all comments made by the Dais. The different working groups resubmitted their working papers to the Dais during the afternoon session.

On Wednesday, the Dais accepted four draft resolutions, none of which was amended. The committee adopted all four draft resolutions as resolutions and all were adopted by acclamation. The resolutions covered a wide range of issues, including the definition of climate change refugees, access to education and vocational training opportunities for refugees, healthcare for refugees, and cultural assimilation of refugees. Following voting procedure, the delegates briefly discussed the second topic on the agenda and then adjourned the meeting until next year.
The Commission for Social Development,

Alarmed and concerned by the rate of climate degradation and the lack of a definition for a climate refugee, which means that climate refugees will not get the same consideration towards being integrated socially and economically into society as other refugees although they are leaving their belonging, homes, and states behind when they are fleeing to their new host state and therefore need to be included and receive the same economic and social integration that other refugees receive,

Noting that climate change, which is a shift in established global weather patterns that results in long-term or permanent environmental change, such as rising sea levels, droughts, and dangerous levels of emissions, is having a long-term impact on the environment and people's lives,

Fully aware of the gravity of the situation that climate refugees face, as well as their right to be accommodated equally,

Recognizing that the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees (1951) defines a refugee as a person who has been forced to flee his or her country due to conflict and persecution because of his or her race, gender, ethnicity, or ideology, and thus does not adequately address refugees who have been displaced due to climate change,

Cognizant of the stigma associated with the term refugee and the potential to address this stigma by educating people about refugees in general, and climate refugees specifically,

Recognizing the need to educate Member States of the gravity of the situation that climate refugees experience, as well as the definition of a climate refugee,

Realizing that the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016) made important strides in bringing the international community together in solving the refugee crisis; however, it failed to recognize and address refugees affected by climate change,

Affirming Sustainable Development Goal 13, established by the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development (2015), which recognizes that climate change is affecting every state around the world and the lives of many people,

Recognizing that while early return and repatriation of refugees as outlined in General Assembly resolution 51/75 (1997) are preferable, climate change will make this difficult to achieve because it produces severe ecological repercussions, and as a result, climate refugees will not be able to return to their homes, and therefore they will need to be socially and economically integrated into their host states,

Calling attention to General Assembly resolution 66/165 (2011), which calls for protection of internally displaced persons due to natural disasters, but nevertheless does not address cross-border displacement due to climate,

1. Recommends that Member States adopt the definition of a climate refugee as a person who is experiencing cross-border displacement due to the impact of climate change;

2. Encourages Member States to participate in campaigns to educate people about climate refugees and the environmental factors that force them to flee their homes, by:

   a. Using media to spread awareness and education about climate refugees, as well as socially integrating climate refugees into their host communities, because it spreads the awareness to the average citizen of the host state;
b. Implementing public campaigns in collaboration with non-governmental organizations to educate the public on the situations that make an individual a climate refugee; and

c. Creating cultural centers and other relevant activities that promote cross-cultural education, thereby facilitating the integration of refugees into society;

3. Further recommends that the General Assembly explicitly focus on and incorporate climate change refugees in its discussions on the Global Compact on Refugees, scheduled to be adopted in 2018, in the context of the follow-up process to the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016).
The Commission for Social Development,

Calling attention to the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees (1951) and its 1967 Protocol, two documents defining the term “refugee” and outlining the rights of displaced persons as well as the legal obligations of States to protect them,

Guided by article 2 and article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), which establish guidelines for Member States to follow in order to ensure the respect of populations as well as ensuring the right to a standard of living adequate for maintaining decent health,

Recalling Commitment 32 of the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016), giving the responsibility of national protection and care of unaccompanied children and children separated from their families to the host country,

Recognizing the conclusion of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) as expressed in the 2007 Note on the Integration of Refugees in the European Union that providing basic public services to refugees like healthcare is necessary to socially integrate refugees into their host societies,

Recognizing the Procedural Standards for Refugee Status Determination under UNHCR’s Mandate (2005), which aims to establish guidelines regarding the process of obtaining legal status for refugees and the criteria for international refugee protection,

Having considered the current condition of refugee camps, where basic human needs such as access to adequate medical treatment and a decent level of sanitation are not fulfilled, as highlighted in Commitment 80 of the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016),

Reaffirming Commitment 83 of the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016) to foster and better develop basic healthcare and social care services for refugee communities within national systems,

Stressing the importance of addressing the needs of refugees who are victims of physical or psychological abuse, especially during transit, upon their arrival to the host country because of the difficult conditions they underwent, as mentioned in the Commitment 26 of the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016),

Deeply conscious of the fact that refugees often do not receive adequate medical treatment due to the lack of communication between the patient and the medical staff caused by insurmountable language barriers resulting in the increased possibility of medical errors,

Noting the importance of providing a patient’s full medical history to healthcare providers in order to accurately treat patients, as explained in the World Health Organization’s (WHO) 2006 Medical Records Manual,

Highlighting WHO’s concern that data from initial health screenings are at times not sufficient for treating refugees, specifically those with chronic diseases,

Cognizant of the difficulties refugees face in accessing their medical records from their country of origin, either taking a long time to retrieve them or not being able to access them at all,

Recognizing the success of a growing number of countries in adopting national electronic health records to streamline medical record retrieval when requested by an individual’s healthcare provider,
Emphasizing the effectiveness of targeted social media campaigns like WHO’s #HandHygiene day in raising awareness and educating populations about safe basic health and sanitary practices within refugee camps, deeply appreciative of the success of various non-governmental organizations and their ability to respond to medical crises around the world, using mobile clinics to help reduce and eliminate discrimination against refugees based on unfortunate health conditions,

1. Strongly urges Member States to ensure the protection of unaccompanied minors, or children separated from their families, by encouraging all countries to include provisionary measures in their refugee settlement legislation in order to resolve the humanitarian crisis which arises during or after the process of refugee relocation;

2. Expresses its hope that Member States will prioritize the appropriate distribution of lawful visas to displaced persons and their families already within their borders, in order to:
   a. Embrace the importance of appropriate and efficient refugee resettlement, advancing economic and social development for all refugees, regardless of ethnicity, countries of origin, or social standing; and
   b. Prevent the continuation of familial separation, lack of access to rights and privileges, and detrimental mental health effects due to the lack of legal status;

3. Strongly encourages Member States to facilitate refugees’ access to healthcare and sanitation;

4. Encourages the procurement of incentives for all willing and able entities so that they may establish mobile clinics in refugee camps, which would provide preventative care, like vaccines, as well as traditional healthcare, that could include commitments such as:
   a. Voluntary government-issued tax concessions for participating and able entities regarding the establishment of private mobile clinics providing low-cost treatment; and
   b. The utilization of psychiatrists through organizations to provide mental healthcare services to refugees;

5. Strongly recommends the reduction of language barriers between healthcare providers and refugee patients and the need for full medical consent by:
   a. Employing refugees with medical credentials to administer culturally sensitive treatment;
   b. Providing linguistic interpreters for the medical patients; and
   c. Promoting participation of civilian volunteers who could provide their expertise in aiding refugees, through conferring incentives, such as academic credits and vocational opportunities;

6. Suggests the launching of awareness campaigns to promote basic public health practices throughout refugee camps in Member States, including preventative care regarding sanitary, primary, and sexual health, disseminated via platforms such as:
   a. Social media outlets, thus providing an efficient way to reach refugees in camps;
   b. Paper campaigns to be distributed through the camps for those without access to handheld technology and written in a simple manner for those who are not proficient in the host country’s language(s); and
   c. Workshops done throughout the camps, in language(s) understood by refugees, in order to decrease unfair discrimination against refugees as well as improve their quality of life;

7. Recommends that Member States establish medical data-sharing policies with other national medical entities and non-governmental medical organizations so that medical providers can easily access individuals’ medical records when in another country, made easier by additional national policy recommendations for all Member States such as:

a. Securely transferring all refugees' medical records into their host state's national system;

b. Formatting and organizing national medical records in a way that is easily translatable to any language and transferable to any state;

c. Taking advantage of systems capable of quickly delivering medical records to other countries when requested by healthcare providers abroad, preferably through an online pathway; and

d. Expanding the existing technical capacity of public healthcare systems in states where it is not possible to maintain national medical records with non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental organizations for technological support.
The Commission for Social Development,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations (1945), particularly Article 55, which calls for higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Welcoming the work of the International Labour Organization (ILO) Employment Policy Department, which supports Member States in creating policy towards fair and equal work opportunities,

Highlighting the innovative support given by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to refugees and Member States alike,

Further highlighting the significance of General Assembly resolution 69/152 (2015), which illustrates the notion that refugees require both integration in the existing working environment as well as protection from exploitation in their working environment,

Recalling article 26 of the Copenhagen Declaration for Social Development (1995), which calls for the promotion of tolerance and non-discrimination, as well as for the equitable distribution of income through equality of opportunity for all,

Further recalling the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016), which discusses the importance of government legislation in eliminating discrimination against refugees in order to ensure their integration into society,

Bearing in mind the right to work free from discrimination, as established in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948) and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (1966),

Further recalling the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs’ International Migration Report (2015), which portrays migration patterns globally and presents opportunities for Member States to include refugee populations into the workforce,

Highlighting article 3 of the Monterrey Consensus on Financing for Development (2002), expressing the need to mobilize financial resources for national and international development goals, of which many pertain to eradicating poverty, which can be furthered by including refugees in the workforce,

1. Urges Member States to intensify public-private partnerships, in collaboration with local non-governmental organizations (NGOs), to provide refugees with educational opportunities and job training by:
   a. Encouraging the private sector to supply apprenticeships or vocational training for refugees to assist them in transitioning into the job market and provide equal wages for refugees; and
   b. Cooperating with the private sector to create and implement national incentive policies to encourage businesses to employ more refugees;

2. Invites the ILO to incorporate a culturally sensitive perspective into policy advice given to Member States for offering job training to refugees when they first arrive into the host country in order to allow refugees to become productive members of society;
3. Recommends that Member States utilize knowledge and share best practices with UNHCR in order to develop policies to expand basic assistance and training so that refugees have the necessary skills for employment;

4. Further recommends that Member States support the utilization of workshops to promote discussion between the private sector and representatives of refugee communities in order to eliminate discrimination against refugees and remove obstacles to their integration into the professional environment;

5. Encourages host countries, in collaboration with the private sector, to develop laws preventing discrimination against refugees;

6. Suggests that countries with labor shortages invite refugees who lack employment opportunities since they are displaced by increasing resettlements of refugees through UNHCR;

7. Encourages Member States to increase financial support to UNHCR resettlement programs.
The Commission for Social Development,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles established in Article 1 of the Charter of the United Nations (1945), which emphasizes universal respect for equality and a global commitment to international cooperation in order to address and resolve issues relating to social and humanitarian crises,

Recognizing article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) (1948), which establishes that education is a fundamental right and should be accessible to all, without exception to refugees who may find themselves in a position in which they are less likely to receive education,

Cognizant of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development (2015), specifically Sustainable Development Goals 4 and 8, which aim to promote economic growth through the assurance that all people can have access to equitable education and acquire knowledge that can be used throughout their lives,

Dismayed by the inability of refugees to have access to adult vocational training due to the limited funding of refugee settlements and limited training opportunities offered by non-governmental organizations (NGOs),

Aware of the cultural and social tensions between host communities and refugees, which cause refugees to be isolated within host societies, as well as the necessity of improving relations to eradicate these social tensions, resulting in the promotion of socioeconomic integration of refugees as emphasized by the 2016 Secretary-General report, In safety and dignity: addressing large movement of refugees and migrants,

Guided by the Addis Ababa Action Agenda (2015) of the Third International Conference on Financing for Development, which emphasizes the need for quality education for both girls and boys, including children of migrant and refugee populations,

Recalling its commitment to the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees (1951), which asks Member States to provide elementary education to refugees comparable to the educational experience of nationals including school certificates, diplomas and degrees, the remission of fees and charges, and the awarding of scholarships,

Reaffirming the principles of article 28 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989), which recognizes the right to education, namely free and compulsory primary education for all children, and the principle of non-discrimination against refugee children,

Alarmed by the findings of the 2016 Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) report, Missing Out: Refugee Education in Crisis, which notes that 3.7 million refugee children are not receiving an education, and thus are not able to properly integrate into society and later into the workforce,

Recognizing the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants (2016), which highlights the importance of providing education for refugee children within a few months of arrival in order to prevent radicalization, militarization, or a rapid increase in violence against the host society and humanitarian aid workers,

Noting with appreciation the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization’s (UNESCO) work on the implementation of the International Fund for Cultural Diversity, promoting strategic action plans to improve the inclusion of cultural policies for refugees into the national education system,

1. Recommends the creation of education programs that provide financial literacy courses for refugees, which would:
a. Contribute to solving issues regarding cultural assimilation, such as refugees accumulating debt beyond their means, which would in turn lead to the exclusion of refugees from the economic system of their host states;

b. Educate refugees on the importance of access to credit, which would allow refugees to enter the economic system of their host states through paths such as the housing scheme by means of SME loans, prompting economic self-sufficiency through the use of financial literacy;

c. Take place at local and accessible schools and community centers with the encouraged assistance of UNHCR; and

d. Be taught by volunteer finance and economics teachers of host states to ensure accurate information is being shared;

2. Supports the use of community technology centers as exemplified by various Member States, which would provide access to information technology, skills training, and education for refugees that would:

a. Extend to learning centers and technology programs in refugee camps such as the UNHCR Tablets for Education program which aids refugees with cultural awareness;

b. Provide online language support through the use of language apps, where refugees can learn the local language of their host states;

c. Be a system that provides access to city services that would encourage social inclusion and knowledge of city facilities; and

d. Be developed through partnerships with the Red Cross, UNHCR, and Microsoft, which all prioritize using technology to aid refugees in the education process;

3. Invites the International Centre for Technical and Vocational Education and Training of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO-UNEVOC) to replicate successful technical and vocational educational training (TVET) initiatives and to focus on broadening their efforts towards the promotion of TVET programs for refugees, providing the proper equipment and technology necessary for the development of their skills;

4. Proposes to Member States hosting refugees to bear in mind the differences in the educational needs of the refugee community, such as:

a. Refugees coming from an acute conflict, with a higher likelihood of quick repatriation, who need their education to continue in the way of their state of origin; and

b. Refugees coming from complex, long-term situations, which take longer to resolve, who need training to engage in the educational and vocational systems within the hosting state;

5. Encourages the private sector, in collaboration with local non-governmental organizations (NGOs) whose work pertains to the socioeconomic integration of refugees, to supply apprenticeships or vocational training, which would ease the transition of refugees into local economies, by having:

a. Local community members volunteer to partner with local NGOs to teach these courses;

b. Courses teaching refugees about the local economic dynamics; and

c. Local community members inform refugees of job opportunities;

6. Further encourages UNESCO to incorporate refugee initiatives within the International Fund for Cultural Diversity by creating culturally sensitive education, which utilizes teacher training programs to inform teachers of the diverse cultures of the refugee students, thus providing refugees with access to cultural materials and a deeper understanding of their host state’s culture;

7. Calls upon UNESCO to work with national education ministries to support the participation of already integrated refugees in education systems as well as teachers in the host states, utilizing their knowledge to provide multicultural curricula, giving refugees the possibility of learning the host state's language while protecting their national identity and promoting a cultural exchange between the refugees and the host state’s teachers;

8. Suggests that UNESCO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development collaborate with local organizations and national governments in order to make the training and assessment of local communities more effective, in order to prepare those communities to better communicate with refugees to eliminate language barriers;

9. Welcomes the inclusion of both the official language of the state of origin as well as the language of the host state into culturally aware school curricula, especially for new students in refugee settlements, to ensure a smooth transition into the new host state;

10. Invites all relevant UN bodies and stakeholders to actively participate in the work of the Commission at a high level.
